HONGKONG, FEBRUARY 6, 1891.

THE EMPRESS DOWAGER has once more given proof of the remarkable tact and ability which enabled her during the minority of two successive Princes to so successfully guide the helm of state in the vast empire of China. The decease of Prince Chun rendered it necessary for the Empress Kwang Su as his son to go into mourning, and the relationship of the monarch to his illustrious subject opened up some nice points of etiquette and filial observance.

The Empress Dowager, who had with so much foresight and address managed the succession on the death of the Emperor Tsuu Chien, stepped forward again to meet this emergency. A series of remarkable edicts were promptly issued at her desire and under her inspiration in which she declared her intention of making a precedent to regulate the burial rites and the period and manner of mourning, and the arrangements were well planned to cause the least possible interruption to public business, the Emperor only going into seclusion for the brief period of eleven days. Reviewing the measures adopted by Her Imperial Highness, our thimble contemporaries, after enlisting her prompt and energetic action, say:—In the edicts just issued, the Empress makes clear her intention of nipping in the bud any kind of agitation contrary to her dynasty policy. Betting on the double authority of an Emperor of the T'ang dynasty, Kien-Low, and the great Chinese Sage Confucius, the Empress lays it down that if a son of higher rank than the father the burial of the latter must be regulated according to the rank of the father, but as regards all subsequent ceremonial the son must worship the tablet of the father as if he were of equal rank. This then appears to be Her Majesty's method of cutting the Gordian knot; the force and effect of which will doubtless be more clearly appreciated as events unfold themselves than they can be at the moment as they are not initiated between the lines; they have been carefully elaborated to a pitch of refinement demanding study to make it intelligible. A full comprehension of the meaning is no more to be expected, of hand, than that of any other work of genius which has engaged the author's thoughts for a lengthened period.

Nothing could be more 'pat' than the authority quoted, although it probably would not be impossible for a diligent searcher to discover in the mass of Chinese historical literature equal authority for the Chinese doctrine, Her Majesty has the advantage of holding the field, and it would be foolhardy to controvert her views. The Empress goes on to cite the late Prince's secret memorial, at greater length than on the previous occasion, emphasising the same doctrine. Quoting the Emperor's edicts, she says:—The
